HISTORY

For decades, the winery used the equipment of the old winery to make wine in a home-made way: wooden traditional presses of the early 20th century, ancient stone presses dug in the ground, and cement tanks to store the wine. As years passed, more hectares of vineyard were acquired; the old winery was restored and extended to where, today, the Rubicón wine is produced. Set in La Geria and surrounded by centenarian eucalyptuses, the winery stands solemnly overlooking the National Park of Timanfaya. The dream of creating a unique winery in order to preserve the traditions of Lanzarote is now a reality thanks to Don Germán

SOIL

The island of Lanzarote (one of the Canary Islands) is covered in volcanic ash for as far as the eye can see, making these some of the most unique wines on the planet.

TASTE PROFILE

The combination of two varietals, malvasia volcanica and moscatel, this original wine is an explosion of aromas and flavors. Hay yellow with golden aspects. Clean and bright. Tropical fruit and floral aromas. Fresh with well-balanced sugar and acidity. Ample and excellent experience in the mouth.

FOOD PAIRINGS

Goes great with just about any cuisine you see near the ocean but is also versatile with white meats. Chicken, Turkey, Tuna, you name it!
